The range and scope of a country larger than mainland USA can make the idea of planning a trip to Brazil a little daunting. However, by thinking about what you really want from the trip (and what is available) you should be able to plan an unforgettable honeymoon with a little care and attention.

First off, after a hectic wedding build up the first thing you're likely to want to do is get straight to the beach. But which type of beach? with over 4,000 miles of coastline Brazil has a huge range of different beach locations, so you should think about which suits you best.

If you want to spend a laid back beach village life, there's no place better than the Nannai beach resort at Porto De Galinhas. It is located in a small beachside village of fishermen. There's plenty of restaurants, bars and shops in the village (though all low key luxury, very much in keeping with the natural style of the place) and great beaches nearby. It does get busy (and very expensive) during New Year's Eve and Carnival.

If you want to stay in a beach town nearby Rio then Casas Brancas at Buzios and Vila D'este at Buzios can't be beaten as you don't have to jump on a plane to get there from your international flight. Buzios is famous for its beaches and crystal-clear water contrast with the exuberantly sculptured landscape and exotic vegetation, which a prodigal "Mother Nature" has privileged with a wonderful year-round summer. Naturally some of the exclusivity can be lost, but choosing the correct hotel will make the difference. This beach town has more options for bars and nightlife, also if you want to spend your time more relaxing than you can go further down the coast in Paraty or Picinguaba.
