

Surveillance Cameras: To Snoop Or Not To Snoop

The average person looks at covert surveillance with his own biases. But in all intents and purposes, surveillance cameras have good points too, especially if you're on the trail of a false hearted lover. But what is one man's meat is poison for another.

Crackdowns on cheats, lovers, and ex-loves

Covert surveillance is a torment to cheating lovers and exes and professional cheats at the poker tables. On the other side of the fence, surveillance cameras are the answers to fervent prayers to catch cheats.

For the average Jane, the words surveillance cameras are thrilling – the need to know if her lover is being true or faithless is overwhelming and any spy ware available in the market is a tantalizing gadget.

Unless there is proof of infidelity, no sane man or woman will admit to it. It's the big AHA! And poof, relationships are destroyed or re-established after repeated promises of good behavior.

Spying on spouses, legal?

But there are rules to follow in the spying game. Even if you're on a personal mission, you have to be careful lest you be accused of invading one's privacy. But is spying against one's own husband, wife, or lover a crime?

There are many ways to spy on a partner, spouse, or co-habitant:

1. tapping telephones
2. accessing stored computer files
3. intercepting emails
4. stealing passwords to gain personal information
5. spying through surveillance cameras

If you are thinking of doing anything of the above, think twice. Depending on the degree of your spying, you may violate criminal laws, civil codes, and the common law. If you are going to use this proof of infidelity to blackmail or demean your spouse or partner and cause him or her undue stress and trauma, you are liable to answer in court for your careless action.

When not to snoop

When you suspect your live-in partner or husband is onto something and you don't have surveillance cameras or don't know a thing about spying, don't do it on your own.

One woman hid under her husband's SUV parked in the alleged girlfriend's house. She fell asleep and unfortunately, someone let all the air of the wheels out and trapped the poor woman under the car.

If you can't risk your partner's ire and disgust, then don't snoop. Snooping often leads to distrust and the eventual dissolution of a relationship. Again, if you can't endure a break-up at this point in your relationship, don't snoop.

Going beyond snooping is stalking with snooping. If you are going to the extent of trailing your spouse everyday and making those mysterious calls to his workplace just to make him miserable, be warned.

When to snoop

But still there are ways to get around the snooping issue. If your husband is behaving strangely and you suspect he is into drugs or other illegal activities, then snoop. It is for his sake that you are taking pains to know what is going on.

Get your surveillance cameras to do the snooping in the house when you're not home. There is a perfect reason for the surveillance system. You can always say that home security is your number one priority. So there is no reason for any police officer to knock on your door and arrest you for spying on your own house.

About the Author

Choose the right surveillance cameras and wireless security cameras for your CCTV system. Visit Video-Surveillance-Guide.com today for more information about security systems.

Source: www.isnare.com

Source: <http://articles.exospy.com>